

SHORT CV Dr. Dimitrios Zarakovitis

email: dzarkovit@uop.gr

Dr. Dimitrios Zarakovitis is a Postdoctoral Researcher in the Department of Economics in the University of Peloponnese. He is a member of the Digital Health Applications and Health Economics Analytics Laboratory of the University of Peloponnese (DigiTHEA Lab). He received his Master's Degree in Public Administration from the University of Peloponnese in 2015. His doctoral thesis entails the study of financial and technical characteristics of medical equipment of radiological laboratories of Public Hospitals in the 6th Health Region by using Geographic Information Systems (GIS). He also developed applications that can be used in the field of Health Informatics.

His research interests include Health Informatics, Geographic Information Systems Applications, Management and Health Economics. His research interests also include Large-Scale Data Management, Databases, the Use of New Technologies and Digital Media and Development of Web Applications. In recent years he has taught as an academic scholar in various faculties of the University of Peloponnese theoretical and laboratory courses such as Informatics, Databases and Algorithms. At the same time, he has assisted in the teaching of courses such as Linear Programming, Decision Making Methodology and Management Information Systems, Health Informatics and Biophysics - Radiology both at theoretical and laboratory level.

He has written many articles mainly related to Health Informatics, the Use of Information and Communication Technologies and Health Economics in international reputable scientific journals and presentations at conferences. At the same time he participates as a reviewer in the editorial board of international journals while he has been awarded in important competitions and conferences.